Courrier des Etats Unis says: "We are assured that Soulouque called Faustin I, is dead. In this age of negro rehabilitation the figure of Soulouque is a grand one. His life presents some striking features. He was born in 1789, the day of the taking of the Bastille, a date full of happy omens. At first a slave, he was accustomed to contemplate nature and to sound its mysteries by picking off caterpillars from the cocoa trees of his master. They say in Havti that he one day met in the woods an old negress, come from Martinique, who prophesied a great future for him. It was the same negress who had foretold her future elevation to Josephine Tascher de la Pagerie.

In 1803, the young Soulouque, hardly fourteen years old, took part in the war against the French and made himself remarkable for a cowardice which in no wise controlled his inhum anity. We have no intention of reviewing his military career. He served in turn all governments and took all the oaths that were required with a somersaultic facility worthy of more advanced countries. Having attained the Presidency by a stroke of luck he did not long content himself with this modest post, but naturally dazzled by famous examples he put the Constitution in his pocket, manufactured a care of J. M. Newton, Freight Agent, at Alexnew one and became Emperor like any one else | andria, will be forwarded as far as by the Grace of God and the national will.-The black party supported him assisted by the sect of the Vaudoux. The mulattoes were trodden down Soulouque triumphant wished to surround himself with a brilliant aristocracy. He wished a court and he had one. "Me wish little counts, big marquis and great dukes," as he eloquently said to the Senate. And, in effect, by virtue of his sovereign power, he created a Count Cry Baby, a Duke Salt Cellar, a Prince Sugar Plum, and so on. It fortune had favored him in his wars against the Dominnicans he would have decorated with the titles of his battle-fields some of his generals. This is a pious custom to perpetuate the memory of blood spilt and of the massacres of thousands of iv 1—tf Soulouque had many manias. Like all his crowned brothers he delighted in tinsel, feathers and plumes. General Boum, of the Grand Duchy of Gerolstein, would not have been out of place at his court. For want of orders enriched with diamonds he ornamented his officers wilh pieces cut from tin sardine boxes; an elegance little fastidious, which proved that he loyed order and economy in his finances.

After the example of Henry IV., of Louis

XIV. and of Victor Emmanuel, Soulouque adored women and espoused a great many over the left shoulder in spite of the leonine rage of Adelina his legitimate wife. These morganatic marriages became more and more frequent towards the end of his reign, but the old Emperor could not be rejuvenated like Faust by Mephistopheles and he contented himself with what our fathers courteously called des menus suffrages. The marriage was none the less consummated in his eyes and he would say to his new spouse "You now wife to me; you faithful to me or you couic." And this couic was accompanied by a gesture as significative as the famous twinkling of the eye of the joyous King Louis XI to his boon companion Tristan. All this is historical. The last wives of Soulouque lived as vestal virgins. A less innocent mania of Soulouque's consisted in shooting icdiscriminately his enemies and his friends. He has been justly blamed, for if it is useful to suppress one's adversaries, it seems impolitic to attack one'e supporters. Those who knew Soulouque best uever knew exactly if he acted thus from rashness or from joviality or from an innate fondness for blood letting. The most indulgent judges would have some trouble in admitting any of these excuses. Perhaps, however, it is not for our age to judge. In less than eighty years we have seen the most civilized people of the earth massacre their king, their queen, their great poets, their men of science and a crowd of innocent beings. People have been killed everywhere on various pretexts. Recently even a generous prince has been assassinated. Is it fair then for an age covered with crimes and blood to judge so severely the defunct Sovereign of Hayti? Soulouque ambitioned always the glory of conquests, but he only reaped Waterloo defeats. He read print not without difficulty, and more erudite than Charlemagne, who could only seal his letters with the handle of his sword, he knew how to spell and sign his own name. Tall of stature, he was not among the ugliest of his race, although he was much farther removed from the Apollo of Belvidere than the gorilla; and he only felt himself above his fellow mortals when he was drunk-a superiority which he enjoyed over other princes. The Radical State Central Committee of Pennsylvania yesterday passed resolutions endorsing ex-Secretary Stanton, Gens. Sheridan and Sickles, and thanking Gen. Grant for his course in relation to the removal of Sheridan. BAKER'S BITTERS FOR DYSPEPSIA, Seth Arnold's Balsam for the Summer Complaint, Forrest's Junioer Tar for Coughs, Colds, &c., Butler's Pile Remedy, Helmbold's Sarsaparilla for Purifying the Blood.
